Release of rights

Selecting a Creative Commons licence and submitting a declaration of consent

Licenses of uploaded media

When you upload a file on Wikimedia Commons, you must apply a free-use license statement for it: you must grant the rights to use the work under a Creative Commons licence. Here are two recommended licences for performing art images.

CC BY 4.0 Creative Commons – Attribution 4.0 International

This license allows others to redistribute, remix, adapt and build upon the material, even for commercial purposes, as long as appropriate credit is given to the creator. This license is recommended for maximum dissemination and use of licensed material.

CC BY-SA 4.0 Creative Commons – Attribution - ShareAlike 4.0 International

This license allows others to redistribute, remix, adapt and build upon the material, even for commercial purposes, as long as appropriate credit is given to the creator and as long as that they assign an identical license to their derivative work. This license is often compared to open source software and open source “copyleft” licenses. This is the license used by Wikipedia and other sister projects.

If you do not own the rights...

If the file is not your own work (i.e., you did not take the photo yourself), you must:

1. Obtain written permission from the photographer to upload the photo to Wikimedia Commons (you can use this email template);
2. Forward the photographer's written authorization and a declaration of consent ; OR Ask the author to email their declaration of consent to permissions-commons@wikimedia.org;
3. Place the tag `{{subst:PP}}` ("Permission Pending") on the file description page, in the summary section, under the `|permission=` field, in addition to the license chosen by the copyright holder.

Describing and adding data to an image in Wikimedia Commons

In other words... Optimizing an image for discoverability!

How to fill in the file information

Caption: A one-line explanation of what the image represents (i.e. a one-sentence version of the image title). Any translation you provide will be integrated to the JSON-LD of the page – this will positively impact the discoverability of the image

Description: A more detailed description that may include the title of the production, the name(s) of the performer(s), the producing company, the place and/or the festival where the photo was taken.

Source: You may provide a hyperlink to the website of the photographer and/or the website of the company whose production is featured on the photo.

Author: The name of the photographer + “, performing arts production by <name of producing company>” (if applicable).

See: Commons:First steps/Quality and description

Structured data

Wikimedia Commons structured data is linked to the Wikidata knowledge base.

Machines (i.e, crawling robots) can easily read this information, make sense of it and process it. It is one of the most powerful features of Wikimedia Commons.

See: Commons:Structured data

The most important property for images is depicts \(P180\).

It interlinks the image with the Wikidata item(s) describing the artist, production or venue represented on the image. This enables robots to crawl from the image, to the Wikidata item, to the artist or company website.

If the artist, production or venue appearing in the image already has a Wikidata item, enter that item's name as the value of “depicts”. Otherwise, use generic classes such as: performing arts production \(Q43099500\), performing arts building \(Q57660343\), etc.

Supplementary information

Namespaces on Wiki Commons

Space	Contains	Description
principal	galleries	Pages on a theme that groups many “ File: ”. Galleries are manually constructed pages.
File:	documents (images, videos, PDF)	A page for each uploaded file. A page can contain several versions (files). A multitude of different file formats are supported by Wiki Commons (.JPG, .PNG, .TIFF, .PDF, .TAB, etc).
Category:	categories	Pages that contain an editable header, followed by all pages that are assigned to that category.
Creator:	the creators of the represented content	Pages to provide information on the creators of the represented works.

Namespace “File:”

This namespace exists in all instances of MediaWiki, (all Wikis that use the same underlying software, not just other foundation projects). It is used to represent documents of all types.

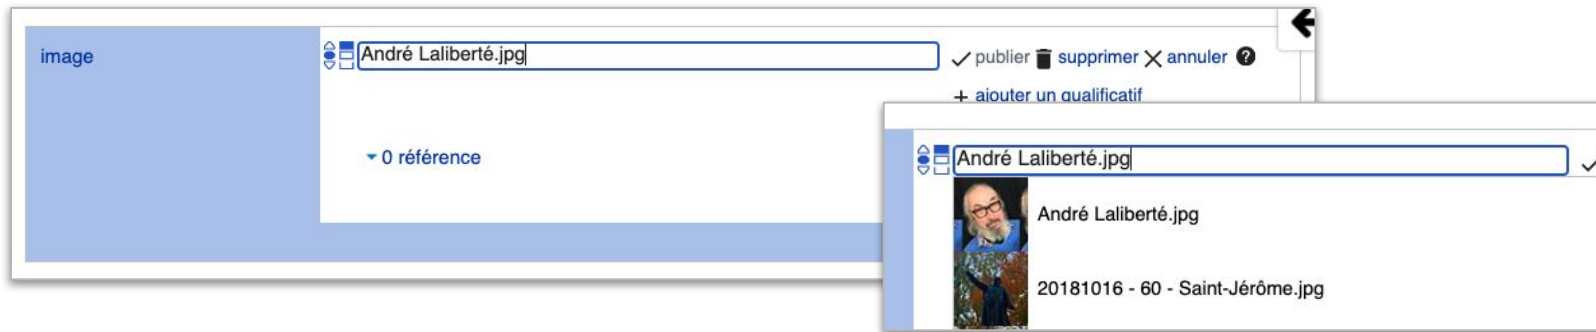

In Wikimedia foundation projects, there is a particular sharing of the “File:” namespace, in the sense that everyone has access, in addition to their namespace for their local files, to the namespace of Wiki Commons files. This is what allows images from Wiki Commons to be viewed on other Wikis.

When referring to an image in Wikidata, (always as a value within a triple), the name of the image file will not be preceded by “File:”, contrary to its name in Wiki Commons.

Main namespaces, galleries

The main namespace, also named “Principal” contains the Wiki Commons galleries.

Galleries exist to present a structured and useful collection of media. Usually, they are created to give a sample or overview of all the media on a given topic.

Examples of galleries:

- https://commons.wikimedia.org/wiki/Theatre_buildings

Namespaces - “Category:”

The namespace “Category:” is also tracked by Wiki Commons. It contains a link to the category pages.

Category pages are like gallery pages, except that they are compiled automatically from wikicode present in the content pages they categorize.

Here is an exemple of a category, the images that are identified with this label:

Namespaces - “Creator:”

The “Creator:” namespace contains pages about the artists responsible for the represented creation (not the creator of the media file, but the creator of the works represented).

Since 2017, Creator templates began to use data pulled from Wikidata. Today, most of the information comes from Wikidata and the creator pages just display it.
